VOL. I. WASHINGTON, D. C., TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 1860. No. 2.

ers loaned themselves to the creation of that temporary panic. Doubtless they thought they could control the panic thus created; but children must not play with edged tools; and the parties alluded to begin to discover the appreciation of the adage. Well, they had their ante-election panic; and no doubt all concerned in it made money, and then suffered things to resume their usual position in order to realize the fruits of their ill-gotten gains. After Lincoln's election was known, and South Carolina proclaimed her determination to break up a Government she could not rule, the panic-makers gravely determined that another dose would do no harm, but yield a rich harvest, and at the same time injure the incoming Administration. Accordingly, they resorted to the old plan of calling in "call loans," which we are now some weeks since. The whole system of "call loans" by banks is one of abomination; and we indulge the hope that the next Legislature will investigate this matter, and prohibit any such practice in future. Astonishing as it may appear, as a rule, one-eighth of all the loans made by the banks of this city, or about fifteen millions of dollars, are made on what are known as "call loans;" and the reader, with this fact in his possession, will at once perceive how easy it is, in the wielding of this enormous lever, to create a panic whenever a panic is desirable, and outside causes favor such proceeding. One of our banks had a loan of this nature with one of our most substantial houses upon a favorite stock. Last week he was notified to pay up. He called at the bank, and demanded to know if all was required. One-half was peremptorily demanded, and he was told to be ready with the balance this week! He resented this treatment; and preferring to meet a loss to enduring the humiliating manner of the bank officer, he promptly sold the stock at the board, and he has three o'clock paid his loan. Of course, his stock was sacrificed. But that was not all. His being compelled thus to force $100,000 of one stock upon the market, necessarily forced down that stock, and others fell from sympathy. In the mean time, other "call loans" peremptorily demanded, forced other borrowers to the same resort. More and other stocks are thus forced upon a falling market; and then commenced panic No. 2. Now, steps in a bank closely connected with the South, backed by several other institutions desirous of augmenting the magnitude of the South Carolina movement, and by curtailing its discounts, increases its specie line more than a hundred per cent. Everybody knows that if one or two banks thus curtail, others are compelled to follow suit or lose their specie; and, consequently, such is the nature of our banking system, that three or four banks of large capital, if under the control of weak, reckless, or incompetent officers, may at any moment produce a panic such as we are now experiencing. They have only to curtail their discounts and increase their specie line; and straightway, in self-defense, the other banks are compelled to adopt a similar policy. And that is precisely our present position. Without any earthly object except to injure in advance the Administration of Lincoln, and to prey upon the weak, this crusade against stocks and credits of every kind was commenced by reckless men, who, in their ignorance of monetary affairs, foolishly supposed they could control the panic about to be created, whenever it had answered their purpose. They find now, however, that it is easier to create excitement than to allay it—that those who have raised the whirlwind cannot control it; and now, alarmed at their own work, they throw themselves upon the greater resources and more practical talents of their neighbors.

REMARKABLE REANIMATION.
Dr. Chirchot, physician of the Emperor of Russia, related that a young girl in the service of the Prince of —, who had for some time kept her bed with a nervous affection, at length, to all appearance, was deprived of life. Her face had all the characters of death; her body was perfectly cold; and every other symptom of death was manifested. She was removed into another room, and placed in a coffin. On the day fixed for her funeral, hymns, according to the custom of the country, were sung before the door; but, at the very moment they were going to nail down the coffin, a perspiration was seen upon her skin, and in a few minutes it was succeeded by a convulsive motion in the hands and feet. In a few minutes she opened her eyes, and uttered a piercing scream. The faculty were called instantly in, and in a few days her health was re-established.

The account which she gave of her situation was extremely curious. She said she appeared to dream that she was dead, but she was sensible to everything that was passing around her, and distinctly heard her friends bewail her death; she felt them envelop her in the shroud, and place her in the coffin. The sensation gave her extreme agony, and she attempted to speak; but her soul was unable to act upon her body. She describes her sensations as very contradictory, as if she was and was not in her body at the same instant. She attempted in vain to move her arms, to open her eyes, to speak. The agony was at its height when she heard the funeral hymn, and found that they were about to nail down the coffin. The horror of being buried alive gave a new impulse to her mind, which resumed its power over its corporeal organization, and produced the effects which excited the notice of those who were about to convey her to a premature grave.—European paper.

PERSONAL SECURITY.—“Will you do me a favor?” said young George Brooks to his wealthy friend, Simon Hanson.
“What is it, George?” said Hanson.
“I wish you to lend me a hundred dollars, sir.”
“Call at my counting-house,” rejoined Hanson.
George was not long in paying his respects. “What security can you give me, young gentleman?”
“My own personal security, sir.”
“Very well, get in here!” said Hanson, lifting up the lid of a large iron chest.
“In here?” exclaimed George, in astonishment.
“What for?”
“This is the place where I always keep my money,” said Hanson, and he pointed to a large bag of money.
